HP delivers solutions to change the economics of technology

New Offerings Help Customers Manage Downturn and Thrive in Recovery

HP today announced new products, solutions and services that enable organizations to address the short-term cost reductions required by today's challenging economy, while laying the groundwork to exit the downturn stronger and more competitive.

Economic downturns can more than double the likelihood that a business significantly changes its industry ranking, and those that make it into the top quartile during a downturn typically sustain their market premium for an average of three years.

Technology plays a major role in determining an organization's success before, during and after a downturn. In a 2007 survey, 99 percent of chief executive officers said technology is integral to the success of their companies.

"Winning CIOs are focused on both strategic cost reductions and supporting long-term business growth," said Jim Wagstaff, vice president and general manager, StorageWorks Division, HP Asia Pacific and Japan. "It's not about spending more: best-in-class IT organizations spend about half as much as the average company on technology as a percentage of revenue. Instead, they strategically spend and prioritize technology investments. HP offers an unprecedented range of solutions to help organizations emerge stronger when the economy recovers."

HP's new hardware, software and services allow organizations to change how they produce, distribute and consume technology resources by:

- Standardizing, optimizing and automating technology to deliver short-term cost reductions;
- Prioritizing new technology investments based on business value; and
- Adopting flexible sourcing options to keep critical projects running and align costs to actual use.

The enhanced HP SAN Virtualization Services Platform 2.1 (SVSP 2.1) is a network-based storage virtualization solution that increases available storage capacity.

Enhanced HP Data Protector software and services provide one data protection solution for all physical and virtual environments.

Prioritize technology investments

As part of its Applications Management Services portfolio, EDS, an HP company, is now offering clients the option of tiered levels of service, which lower the cost of running less-critical applications while maintaining the highest service levels for critical applications.
